Alabama's Greatest Natural Resource

LABAMA'S greatest natural resource is the quality of leadership inherent in her people. Alabama has an almost unlimited wealth of mineral deposits, timber, fertile soil d waterways. It is the center of a market of about twenty million people with a buying power of more than seven billion

But these have little value without management—without that quality of leadership which in the past has carried Alabama safely thru every crisis.

Always in the past, leaders have stepped forth from the throng in periods of political disorder or of economic stress and carried Alabama's banner forward to new heights. But the line is not played out. The blood of these great leaders still flows through the veins of Alabama's sons.

In every county you will find today business leaders who have turned their backs on this depression, wiped off their losses, shut their ears to hard times talk and started planning for the good times which are coming back again.

VERY Alabama cotton farmer knows that soil wears out . . . and that unless he keeps on putting back into the ground again health building plant foods it will cease to grow crops. Exactly the same thing is true of Alabama business. Unless Alabama citizens enrich the Alabama market by putting back into it money they have made, the Alabama market will wear out and cease

Almost all of every dollar that you spend for Alabama coal or coke goes back into the Alabama market, enriching it again so that it can keep on growing profits for the Alabama merchant, farmer, manufacturer, lawyer, doctor and business man. Almost all of every dollar that you spend for Natural Gas leaves the state, taking money from the pockets of Alabama people who buy from you—impoverishing instead of enriching Alabama soil. The Natural Gas line from Louisiana which runs thru Alabama, has an annual capacity of about thirty-six billion five hundred million cubic feet of gas. This is the equivalent of about one million three hundred and fifty thousand tons of average Alabama coal or coke per

Production of this supply of Louisiana gas requires absolutely no Alabama labor, and creates no payrolls for the state. Production of its equivalent of Alabama coal or coke would furnish a years work to about one thousand Alabama miners. The transportation of this supply of Louisiana gas requires practically no Alabama labor after pipe lines are once laid.

The transportation of its equivalent of Alabama coal or coke requires over 27,000 freight cars, gives employment to many Alabama railroad employees and produces gross revenues for Alabama railroads of about one million seven hundred thousand

This is the seventh of a series of advertisements, pub-lished by Alabama coal and coke companies about Alabama coal and coke.
